GFOA's Learning Pathways Your Career Journey, Personalized!

We're excited to introduce Learning Pathways—a powerful new tool designed to help you advance in your career and navigate the terrain of professional growth. In today's fast-changing public finance environment, professionals are asked to master new technologies, adapt to evolving regulations, and take on broader responsibilities than ever before. Learning Pathways gives you a clear roadmap to build the skills you need to succeed in your current role and prepare for future opportunities, all while strengthening the finance capacity of your organization and the communities you serve.

Accounting, budgeting, debt management, treasury, compensation and benefits, and investment management pathways are now available, giving you immediate access to detailed job descriptions that outline the associated knowledge, skills, and abilities required to do the job, resources, self-assessments, and personalized learning recommendations to strengthen your expertise and prepare for what's next. Additional pathways in other areas of public finance will follow soon, including procurement and risk assessment.

Access Learning Pathways

Getting started is simple. Just go to gfoa.org/learning-pathways and sign in with your GFOA username and password to begin exploring Learning Pathways. If you don't have a GFOA account, you'll need to create one to access the Learning Pathways content. Be sure to fill out your profile, so we can accurately identify where you are and where you aspire to go.

Target Your Next Role

Government finance professionals manage and interpret financial data to support organizational objectives, which help their communities thrive. Your success often requires precision, critical thinking, and competence in the knowledge and skills required to do the job. Positions span from entry-level support to executive leadership.
